Our four strategic pillars

One common vision: “Meaningful Brand Idea”

Havas aims to make a meaningful difference to brands, businesses and people and to put this into practice for our clients, we identify a Meaningful Brand Idea or MBI.

Whatever marketing challenge we are trying to solve, be that through creativity or through media, our teams are unified in their approach as they seek the right MBI. Meaningful Brand Ideas factor in the functional, personal and societal ways in which a brand benefits the consumer and helps us unlock new insights.

This consideration of all stakeholders helps us fuel renewed relevance with which we guide the creative development of our clients’ brand positioning and identity.

Beyond creative executions, the MBI forms part of our new global operating system for media - Mx.

Through an understanding of what makes brands meaningful, and by capitalizing on the most meaningful media for the audience, we can go beyond a traditional media plan, and create a valuable Media Experience (Mx). Meaningful Media is the media that matters most to the consumer and our operating system bases itself on connection, context and content to create a stronger Media Experience that is more effective in achieving a brand’s goals.

The Havas Village Model

Havas Group’s expansive network brings together talent from across the globe to best serve our clients’ needs. Each Havas Village gathers creative, media, digital, design and activation talent under one roof, allowing us to provide an agile, seamless and integrated service for our clients in each market, while also drawing on the talent and support from Villages across the globe. There are now over 60 Havas Villages all around the world. While each Village is unique, they share a common ethos.
